Powerful ideas must be right. Strangely, being right is not the most important quality of an idea. Wrong ideas catch fire all the time. But in the end, your idea isn't worth pursuing unless it's based in reality. (And morally, pushing a wrong idea is reprehensible.) Why it's important. To spread, an idea must be plausible and convincing ...

During the review of the catalog copy for The Most Powerful Idea in the World I noticed that the publisher had chosen to describe it as a work of "narrative nonfiction." I objected to the phrase, arguing - I thought logically - that though the chapters were roughly chronological in order, it wasn't really a narrative at all, but an "idea" book...one that examined an historical ...

The Most Powerful Idea in the World - Q&A (and other stuff...)

We've talked about this one quite a bit-most recently in Changing What We Teach, for example. This is among the biggest and most powerful ideas in 'future learning,' and should be central to any meaningful discussion therein. What are students learning, why are they learning it, and what are they doing with what they know?
